Hi Shawna,

Please see the email below about the Fracking story in Penn. If needed, I can forward this request to OEA for a direct answer.

Thanks,
Rachel

Hi Matty,

Happy New Year.

Can you tell me or can you direct me to the link where EPA gives an explanation about its decision regarding the Dimock water situation?

I'm curious to whether or not their population is so small in numbers that it may fall under the category of it being okay for them not to have clean drinking water. I remember being at NEJAC meeting where the water area of the EPA were talking about a regulation involving what is considered as being acceptable levels of contamination for drinking water when it comes to the size of the population.

Regards,
Beryl

As many of you know, about a month ago Pennsylvania gave permission to Cabot Oil & Gas to stop water deliveries to the families in Dimock, PA, whose water wells had been contaminated by drilling activities in their area. These families have no water for drinking, washing or flushing their toilets. Fractivists and other concerned citizens have been sending donations to a Water Fund to help finance water deliveries. Responding to pressure from all of us, the EPA began an investigation of the Dimock situation, and was just about to demand that water deliveries be resumed. With no explanation, however, the EPA suddenly said on Saturday that it was not about to issue this demand. The Pennsylvania Constitution states that all its citizens have the right to clean water and clean air. Clearly the rights of the Dimock families have been violated.

On Monday, please call the EPA to ask Why No Water for Dimock? Demand that the EPA help the families of Dimock, PA.
